Semester Project Definition

English for Computer Engineering

Computer Engineering Department, Sharif University of Technology

1392 Spring Semester

As your course project, you should write a 500-word, high-quality short essay on a computing-related subject of your choosing. The subject can be anything from consumer electronics (e.g. tablets or graphics cards), computer software or your favorite programming language to any serious academic subject (e.g. an algorithm you have learned about in your courses). Naturally, you should be sufficiently familiar and comfortable with the subject so that, for example, writing the essay in Persian would not take much time from you, although it's OK to do some research about the subject. The essay should be completely written by yourself, and summarizing or copying other writings will make you fail the entire course.

The keyword in the project definition is “high-quality”. You should strive to write an essay which sounds as if it is written by a native English speaker. To this end, you will need to use a range of dictionaries (from monolingual and bilingual ones to specialized dictionaries like dictionaries of idioms and collocations/common phrases), thesauri, reference websites (like Wikipedia) and web search engines, to make sure you are using the correct expressions and terms in their proper context. The grading will be solely based on the quality of your writing, not its quantity (although it should be at least 500 words). So most of your time will be spent finding appropriate vocabulary to use, and checking if you are using vocabulary correctly. Overall, writing the essay could take as much as 50 hours.

The project will be done in three phases, and submitting each phase is followed by feedback from the teacher, which will help you increase the quality of your work. The grading will be based on the final submission only. The deadline for the phases will be at the end of Farvardin and Ordibehesht, and on Tir 10, respectively. In the first phase, you should submit the entire essay, although it might be low-quality. This way, you will be mostly concentrating on the quality of your writing in the second and third phases.
